

Revision

a collection of blackout poetry

Oppressed people cannot remain oppressed forever. None are born倡者。Something within has reminded him of his inborn right of freedom. Encouraging words have reminded him that it can be gained. Black brooks move slowly, but surely. The months of silence have been broken. The voice of Dr. King has moved with a sense of great urgency toward justice. How to control this urge has engulfed the Negro community. One should note and who among us can ignore the fall. The Negro has many pent-up resentments and latent frustrations. These feelings are now welling up in him. If he is not released he will seek expression through violence; this is a threat.
